Routines: positive behaviour strategy

Routines can encourage positive behaviour because they help children learn what's expected of them. Routines also help you plan for times when children might behave in challenging ways. Talking about routines with children can help them understand and follow your family's rules.

raisingchildren.net.au

Routines: why they work as a positive behaviour strategy

- ★ Routines help children cooperate. This is because family routines make it clear who should do what, when, in what order and how often. For example, your child is more likely to wash up after dinner if it's their job to do it as part of your family routine.
- ★ A routine can also help you plan for times when children are likely to behave in challenging ways - like school mornings. A routine helps children know what to expect – for example, you need to leave by 8am. It also helps them understand what you expect from them – for example, they can help by putting their lunch in their lunch box.

Creating routines to help with children's behaviour

- ★ Plan routines for demanding times in the family day – before and after work and school. Things often run more smoothly when you have a routine that gives everyone something to do or that keeps children busy while you get things done.
- ★ Link activities together. This can help your child get through boring activities faster. It also works because doing one activity helps you remember to do the other one. For example, your child could put their laundry in the basket when they go into the bathroom to clean their teeth.
- ★ Make limits part of the routine – for example, limits on activities like screen time. So, a routine for when you're cooking dinner might be your child does homework and then watches one TV program.

Getting children to follow routines

- ★ Put up an illustrated poster of the steps in your routine where everyone can see it.
- ★ Find ways to remind your child to follow the routine without your help. For example, put a radio alarm clock in your child's room. The music can be a signal that it's time to wake up, time to start getting ready for school, or time to come out of the bedroom in the morning.
- ★ Praise your child when they follow the routine without help. Praise works best when you're specific about the behaviour you're praising. For example, 'Thanks for getting your lunch box out of your bag. Good remembering!'
